The Cut-Off Adjective

The مَنْعُوتُ (noun being described) by changing its case-ending.

- This is done by either:
A) Assuming a مُ مُبْتَدَ
B) Assuming a $a^{2}$ "فعْل.
A) Assuming a مُبْتَدَاْ12

'aT"im haadhaa I-walad-a I-miskiin-u.
'Feed this boy, the poor one.'
 because it is the خَبَرْ $\quad$ of an assumed mubtada' which is هُوْ . ie.:

'Feed this boy, (he is) the poor one.'
B) Assuming a فعْل"

The assumed "فعْل" is one of the following three:

1) 1 ' أَمْلَحْ : 'I praise', or
2) أَذُُشٌ : 'I condemn', or
3) أَعْنْي : 'I mean.'

- Example of the assumed verb, ${ }^{8}$ أَمْدَ 'I praise':

نَجَحَ ذَلكَ الطَّالبُ الذَّكِيَّ.
najaHa dhaalika I-Taalib-u I-dhakiyy-a.
'That student passed, the intelligent one.'

Here, الذَّكَيَّ نَعْتٌ مَقْطُوعٌ (a cut-off adjective) because it is the maf"uul bihi of the assumed verb أَمْدَ 1 i.e.:

'That student passed, (I praise) the intelligent one.'

Example of the assumed verb أَذُمُّ 'I condemn':

maa sallamtu "alaa dhaalika I-rajul-i I-mutakabbir-a.
'I did not give salaam to that man, the proud one'.
 it is the maf"uul bini of the assumed verb أَذُمُّ ie.:

'I did not give salaam to that man, (I condemn) the proud one.'

- In the above two examples, the assumed "فعْل" might also be أَعْنِي 'I mean'. ie.:

نَجَحَ ذَلكََ الطَّالبُ (أَعْني) الذَّكيَّ.
'That student passed, (I mean) the intelligent one.'

مَا سَلَّمْتُ عَلَى ذَلكَ الرَّجُلِ (اَعْنْي) الْمْتَكِبِّرَ.
'I did not give salaam to that man, (I mean) the proud one.'

From the Alfiyyah

Ib Maalik - رَحِمَهُ اللُّهُ - says in his Alfiyyah:

This line is from the Dab of النَّعْتُ.

He says:

If you cut off (the na"t), render it marfuu" or manSuub by assuming ("مُضْمرًا) a mubtada' or a naaSib (verb), and these two will never appear.

Here:

$\longrightarrow$ is its مَفعُولٍ Ur ,
نَاصباً
$\longrightarrow$ is ${ }^{20}$ فَمْطْوُ,
لَ $\quad \rightarrow$ means that the assumed elements - mubtada' or fill, are never to be mentioned (in the original statement).

Wisdom in Cutting off the نَعْتٌ

Now this cutting off of the ${ }^{20}$ نَعْ is done to draw the attention of the listener who will not pay any attention to it if the نَعْتٌ follows the case-ending of the مَنْعُوتٌ .

But when it is in a different case-ending, it will immediately draw his attention to it.

Example from the Glorious Qur'aan

A very good example of النَّعْتُ الْمَقْطُو ع - the cut-off adjective - is in suurah al-Masad in the following two aayahs :

امْرَأَتُـــــــــــ)

خَبرّ

$$
\longrightarrow \text { is é sion ơ }
$$

حَمَّالَةَ
$\longrightarrow$ is the بَفْفْوُو
of the assumed fi"l:
أَعْنَي أَذُمٌ or

And the assumed fi"l نَأَذُّ rendering it mansuub:

وَامْرْأَنَّهُ (أَذُمٌُ / أَعْنِي) حَمَّالَلَة الْحَطَبِ

Lesson Summary

النَّعْتُ الْمَقْطُوُعُ

- The na" $t$ may be cut off from the man"uut by changing its case-ending, either by:

Assuming a فُعْلْ or or

- The assumed فغْل is one of these three:

1. أَمْلَحُ
2. أَذُشٌ
3. أَعْني

- Its wisdom is to draw the listener's attention.
- suurah al-Masad has a very good example.
